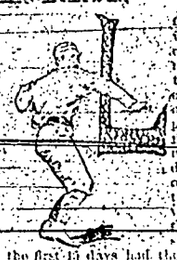
PERENNIAL ANSON.

LIKE TENNYSON'S BROOK HE GOES ON FOREVER.

That Was Seventeen Years Ago, and Now He Is Uncle Lorimer—Pitched Young to Hold Note to the Pittsburg Club—Cayler's Gossip.



COMING back to the first 15 days had three days left in the May the championship season opened. And how Kennedy looked proof of the plasticity and pliancy of baseball which comes from the practice of the sport and which makes the game so dear to the hearts of this sport loving American people.

The teams by then were completely organized, did not wish to go to the front, and which were rated among the experts besides took a commanding lead, and holding it, prior to the close of the season. Louis Boston and the Washington's. Both teams, however, were not the good team by beating two out of three games which were played consecutively at home and abroad. Baltimore and Baltimore.

This start must be regarded as a great which I have not seen for a long time. several years the best of the baseball favorites, but Anson left at the post of the National league team with a record of Pittsburgs were almost left at the post, the gun will leave up at the present leaders will still have a race for the pennant.

The greatest surprise was the success developed by the Chicago team, and it seems as if Uncle Anson had found

This camp has been worth fully developed during the past year, as to-day there are at least fifty mines that have been and are shipping pay ore to the stamp mills and smelters, and hundreds of good prospects that are pushing development work daily. By the time the railroads are completed into the camp many of them will doubtless be shipping properties of pay ore.

THE LARGE FRESCH STAMP MILL is now completed, with all the known modern improvements for treating low grade ores successfully, and will begin operations May 1st, treating a hundred tons of ore per day.

The future of this camp is assured. We believe this is a good time to make profitable investments in many of the GOLD MINING STOCKS of this camp, and will take pleasure in furnishing the best information we have regarding the different properties. Call on or address

WORLD'S FAIR RECEIPTS.

While the receipts for admissions at the Chicago Fair have been excess of those at the Centennial they have not equalled the expectations of the managers of the Fair, nor have they been such as to suffice for its financial success. Unless the receipts do very considerably increased within a short time, the managers will be unable to meet the interest on their bonds when due, unless by the aid of borrowed money, and the Fair so far as the first few weeks is concerned, must be considered a failure from a business point of view.

Among the reasons for this condition must be mentioned the weather, which has been distinctly unfavorable, and the uncertainty regarding railroad rates. But by far the most important reason was the widespread information that the exhibits were not in readiness for inspection, and that visitors could only see a Fair in course of preparation. The truth of this report was undeniable, and it doubtless deterred many who would otherwise have taken an early visit to the Exposition. The thing that would have the greatest effect in stimulating attendance would be the announcement that the exhibits were complete in all places and ready for inspection.

A NATIONAL INCOME TAX.

There is no longer any room for doubt that a national income tax is seriously contemplated by the party now in control of the government. It is difficult to believe that such a plan could meet the approval of intelligent men, and yet it is no more wonderful than some other Democratic ideas. A party that would declare itself in favor of the re-establishment of the State bank money system, and the wilful destruction of American manufactures, need create no surprise by favoring so unreasonable an experiment in finance as a national income tax.

Many reasons might be brought against this method of taxation, but one is sufficient to prove its folly. One of the chief elements in fixing the comparative value of different methods of taxation is the cost of collection. It is sufficient to condemn the proposed income tax that its collection would evidently involve a cumbersome system maintained at a great expense throughout the country. It would not do that the States along the coast should be alone affected, or that the city people should pay a tax while rich farmers should be exempt. The tax if imposed would have to be enforced [illegible] whose income exceeded the minimum limit.

It is plain how much inferior such a method is to the customs tariff. In the Republican system a comparatively small number of men at the principal seaports of the country collect the revenue. Evasions of the law and frauds are made extremely difficult and the smallest possible part of the amount taken in taxation is used for the expense of collection.

Many of the Democratic leaders seem to feel that they have been put into office solely for the purpose of making a change in Republican methods. But in this instance as in many others they are likely to find that a change is not always an improvement.

THE AUSTRALIAN PANIC.

The reports of failures among the largest of the banks of Australia, and of very serious financial disturbances there, are not without an interest to the people of the United States. Under modern conditions there is a close relation between the business affairs of all countries and financial disturbances in one are quickly felt in the others. The effect of the Argentine failures a few years ago was [illegible] considerable influence on the prices of stocks in New York. It seems reasonable that the effect of the Australian failures would be even more marked.

The sums involved are very large. In the last year the failures have included ten banks with a total capital of nearly $300,000,000, and the loss to British depositors, whose money was in these banks awaiting investment, will equal $100,000,000.

The cause of the trouble is the familiar one. [illegible] Immense sums of money have been borrowed and spent in unproductive improvements, and other large sums have been wasted and stolen. Jobbery and corruption have flourished in the colonial legislatures, and costly public buildings and other public works have been erected far in advance of the necessities of the country. Besides there has been a real estate boom of [illegible] proportions, and [illegible] almost absurd figures. The inevitable collapse has not only the speculators but dragged down banks and business [illegible].

Australia also has felt the financial unsteadiness common throughout the world and in her weakened condition its effects have been more severe. The decline in the value of wool has lessened her ability to pay the interest on her continuous loans just at the time when it was most important that those engagements should be promptly met.

The result will be a long period of depression in Australia and a checking of the development of the country for a considerable time. It will also have a tendency to turn English investments in other directions and may thus indirectly [illegible] to the United States. Our own country offers the best and safest field for the foreign capitalist that is to be found in the world, and the Australian failures emphasize this fact.

It is reported that the Czar has recently issued another edict of Jewish expulsion. The report is the more likely to be true because of what is known of the purpose of the Russian government. Secretary of the Jews roman in Russia seeking an effort will be made to force their removal. The matter chiefly concerns this country because large numbers of undesirable immigrants [illegible] consequence of the severity of the Russian laws. Fortunately however the United States has laws as well as Russia though of a somewhat different nature and the new requirements added to our immigration laws at the last session of Congress, if rigorously enforced, will be sufficient to secure us from these dangers.

The decision of the Exposition directors to open the World's Fair grounds on Sunday while the buildings containing the exhibits remain closed will not be satisfactory either to the advocates of Sunday opening or to those who favor strict Sunday closing. By this action the board takes advantage of a technicality to contravene the will of Congress while it keeps a firm grip on the grant of $2,500,000.

A number of Republican newspapers are outspoken in criticism of Cleveland's office seekers' exclusion order, seemingly with the idea of making political capital of it. Such an attempt is likely to prove a boomerang. The order is the most sensible and patriotic act of Cleveland's administration up to date.

Mrs. Depew.

No man in the United States has done more in all times and places to enlighten, to comfort and to elevate the American people than Chauncey M. Depew. And now when one of the noblest women that can fall a man has come upon him, he is receiving such sympathy as is seldom tendered to anyone out of the highest walks of public life. Mrs. Depew, whose death occurred yesterday, like her husband, inherited the purest strain of patriotism. She comes from one of the oldest New York families, and while every opportunity was open to her to become conspicuous [illegible] in the duties of the home and in the tender ministrations of charity and philanthropy. [illegible] wonderfully successful and intensely active career, Mr. Depew had in his faithful, [illegible] helpmeet and wife, the wife whose home was the refuge at which she worshipped. This great grief which disconsolates one of the happiest households in the land calls out the deepest sympathies not only of those who have had the pleasure of Mr. Depew's acquaintance and friendship, [illegible] recognizes in him that prosperous [illegible] of ability and superb integrity which have made him, though but a private citizen, one of the most illustrious men of his time.—New York Mail and Express.

A Deserving College.

Colorado College is to be congratulated upon the good fortune that has come to it in the bequest of Mr. J. Henry Stickney of Baltimore. This institution has won the [illegible] of friends of higher education and fully deserves all that is being done for it. Without any draft upon public funds, it is offering to the people of Colorado educational advantages that equal those of the best eastern colleges and the gifts to it are gifts to the educational movement of the State.—Denver News.

Colorado's Tonic Atmosphere.

One very noticeable peculiarity of the people was their habit of speaking of the East as "home." "At home in the East we call that Virginia creeper," said one. "I go home to N. w York every few months," said another. "We long to go back East to our homes, but when we get there the climate [illegible] to Colorado." This was revealed the peculiar tonic influence that the climate has upon thousands of its citizens. But among them are very many who are [illegible] looks to it their regard for the East keep warm until the moment comes when they seriously consider the idea of leaving Colorado. At this juncture they realize for the first time the magic of the mountain air and the hold it has upon them. Few indeed ever seriously think of leaving after one such constultation with themselves. But I must say it is a very queer air. It keeps everyone keyed up to the highest [illegible] tonic, [illegible] the population in ticelese, incessant effort, like a ceaseless breathing of alcohol. It creates a highly nervous people and, as one man said, "it is strange to fancy what the literature of Colorado will be when it develops its own resources and peculiar, strong [illegible] the nervous strain and mental exhilaration of the people." One would suppose alcohol unnecessary there, but on the contrary, there is much drinking. It is a dangerous indulgence. Among the [illegible] suicides are frequent. "If you stay here a week you will read of two," said a citizen. And I did. "Echo Mountain and Its Capital," by Julian Ralph, in Harper's Magazine for May.

The Preservation of the Forests.

While the protection of game has occupied the public mind for a considerable time, the preservation of our forests has had comparatively little recent attention. The past five years especially have seen a more done in this [illegible] direction [illegible] President Harrison and his Secretary of Interior, Noble, brought their influence to bear in the good work, with the most satisfactory results. By their efforts alone no less than fifteen timber reserves were established, which included 1,239,000 acres adjoining the Yellowstone park; 4,000 [illegible] in Southern California; 4,000,000 in Colorado; 867,000 in Washington; 1,800,000 in Arizona, comprising the grand canon of the Colorado river, the site of the most rugged and magnificent scenery in the world; 311,040 in New Mexico, and 12,000 in Oregon—altogether upwards of 13,000,000 acres.

Such an example by the government has had its effect on the States, and the general agitation of the subject has done much to the cause not only in preservation of timber land, but in the protection of game.

Of all the States that have taken up the good fight none has accomplished so much as New York, and no single official has done so much as Governor Flower. Too much praise cannot be given Mr. Flower for lifting the matter of forest preservation out of politics. It is to his efforts alone, it may be said, that the Forest Preserve Bill, so [illegible] by the New York Legislature, received the serious consideration it merited. He alone, of all political power, appeared to grasp the necessities of the case, and in doing so he responded to the earnest desire of those who want to see the forests preserved and in good order. What these great breathing spots are to the people and one who studies the situation must realize. It is a subject of general rejoicing that they have been finally secured.—[C. W. Whitney in Harper's Weekly.

The Hull of the Atlantic.

Proceeding westward from the Irish coast the ocean bed deepens very gradually; in fact, for the first 250 miles the gradient is but six feet to the mile. In the next twenty miles, however, the fall is over 3000 feet, and so precipitous is the sudden descent that in many places the [illegible] 1200 to 1500 fathoms are encountered on very close proximity to the 100 fathom line. With the depth of 1800 to 2000 fathoms the seabed in this part of the Atlantic becomes a slightly undulating plain, whose gradients are so light that they show but little alteration of depth for 1500 miles, says the Nautical Magazine. The extraordinary flatness of these submarine prairies renders the familiar simile of the basin rather inappropriate. The bottom of the Atlantic is not exactly a basin whose depth increases regularly to the center, it is rather a shallow trough like one, or even in the contour of its bed.

The greatest depth in the Atlantic has been found some one hundred miles to the northward of the island of St. Thomas, where soundings of 4,561 fathoms were obtained. The sea bed of Great Britain [illegible] hardly be regarded as forming part of the Atlantic hollow. They are rather a part of the western banks of the European continent which the ocean has overflowed. An elevation of the sea bed 100 fathoms would suffice to lay bare the greater part of the North sea and join England to Denmark, Holland, Belgium and France. A deep channel of water would run down the west coast of Norway, and with this the majority of the fiords would be connected. A great part of the Bay of Biscay would disappear, but Spain and Portugal are but little removed from the Atlantic depression. The 100 fathom line approaches very near the west coast, and soundings of 1000 fathoms can be made within twenty miles of Cape St. Vincent, and much greater depths have been recorded at distances but little greater than this from the western shores of the Iberian peninsula.

Through Childhood's Eyes.

I wonder if we women can't get back again and see how it feels to be a years old. To feel the dancing in our feet and [illegible] world again through baby eyes. Some of us have forgotten all about it and are old maided [illegible] lonely that comes when we can't get out to get a breath of air. But some of us remember.

We remember how we looked out of life's east window and saw the dawn and pulled back the curtains of pink and gold to wake up the sun. We listened to the wind and wondered when the brook told us about the waterfalls that [illegible] away up on the hillside. Why, we knew all that the birds said to each other then. How is it we can't understand now? We know just as well when Mrs. Robin went down to the garden to do some shopping and left her husband to keep house, because we heard him scolding about it all to himself in the pear tree.

And the sound of fairies then. Why, once I knew where fairyland was. It was in a corner of the old red barn. An apple tree stretched its long, knotty arms over it; the grass stood about with its long, delicate green [illegible] up to them.

There were many little lovers in fairyland, winding walks and groves of cedar [illegible] tall as flower beds and choice clumps of moss. In the midst was a lovely lake, and only the grown up people imagined it to be a piece of [illegible] and carpet—[illegible] nights the fairies came, for there used to be fairies then.—Dorothy Deane in Chicago News-Record.

Flour Resisting Mortar.

Whichever mortars used during the cold weather, there is always more or less fear of injury from frost, and masons are accustomed to use salt water, by having the [illegible] with brine and boards during the night. The engineer of the Western railway of France, Charles Rabut, says the ordinary soda of commerce is even better than salt. The soda employed is what is known as the anhydrous carbonate obtained by the Solvay process, which costs less in France than the hydrated carbonate. This is dissolved in a kettle on the proportion of a pound of soda to 2 4 quarts of water at a temperature of about 85 degrees Fahrenheit. This solution is mixed with an equal volume of water at the temperature of the air, to give the water which is used by the masons. A kettle holding 10½ quarts has been found sufficient to serve 10 masons.

The mortar made in this way requires more of the solution than if water alone were used, about one-quarter more being considered the proper increase. Mr. Rabut reports that with this solution mortar has been observed to harden at a temperature about 9 degrees below freezing with at least as [illegible] the rate of a similar mortar without soda at a temperature 11 degrees above the freezing point. While the surface hardens much more quickly, however, the interior remains more [illegible] const the soda is objectionable. Moreover, it is also found to cause a white efflorescence [illegible] for some months.—New York Telegram.

Quick Ways to Clear Land.

By the exercise of skill, much hard labor may be saved in the clearing of land. In this section land is cleared of small timber under 3 or 4 inches in diameter by the following method: Take a log 1 foot in diameter and 16 feet in length, with the bark on. Have each end nicely rounded, leaving a good size knot in the center, to which a log chain can be attached. Fasten a pair of heavy mules or horses to the smaller end and fasten the chain to the tree to be taken [illegible] about two feet from the ground. Now drive around the tree, and as the roots are loosened from the soil cut them with a sharp ax. It is surprising how quickly a tree can be gotten out—six, many of them in less than 20 minutes by the watch. The object of the log is to bring the draft down where the team can get it.

For larger trees, over 10 inches in diameter, block and tackle must be employed, which will take somewhat longer. Trees can be gotten out by the roots in about the same time it takes to cut the tree down. March is the best month to clear land, as the ground is soft, and with a steady team and three active men good progress can be made every day.—Baltimore American.

They Seldom Bathe In Winter.

People in moderate circumstances at Berlin, Dresden, Vienna, etc., have no such thing as a bathroom in their establishments, and are content to go through the entire winter without tubbing. They make up for it, however, in summer by plunging daily into the rivers, lakes and canals that may happen to be anywhere in the vicinity. Nearly all the men and boys are excellent swimmers, natatory instruction being compulsory not only in the navy, but even of all the public schools. The people therefore may be said to be imbued with taste for cold water—in summer. But in winter, alas! they are content to remain unwashed.—New York Tribune.

THE FLEETING SHOW.

[illegible] and Gossip Heard in the Streets.

I heard the reason the other day for the raid on the gamblers of the County Jail by A resident of this place was playing roulette at a Colorado City game and was betting on three black numbers, 17, 20 and 13, but the ball refused to fall in any of those numbers. A by stander stopped the wheel when it was found that a black checker had been shoved in at each of these numbers. The movement of the wheel prevented their being seen. The man demanded that his money be returned but the proprietors refused. Warrants were sworn out for their arrest. The officers thought they had their hands in and arrested all the gamblers in the county. The sheriff is still worked up over it in the county jail.

A physician of this city attended school in New York with Carlyle Harris executed in New York the past week. He was familiar with the case from its inception, knew Helen Potts, the ingredered wife, and has no doubt but Harris was guilty. He says Harris was disagreeable fellow and very unpopular in the school, so much so that his class mates would hiss him whenever he entered, and this long before the murder was known. A brother of Harris's worked in Denver the past winter for Mr. Gerrehls, the steamfitter, as bookkeeper. He was very bright, but would often suddenly begin to cry and [illegible] signs of great nervousness. One day he confessed who he was and the trouble his family was having. Finally he gave up and went back to New York to be with his brother.

I met the colonel the other day and I could see he was on a high horse. The first thing he said was:

"Fleeting, I'm a kicker, and a high kicker at that!"

"You don't mean that you give exhibitions, Colonel?"

"Well perhaps I do sometimes make an exhibition of myself, but I don't mean that kind of a kicker. No—No the kind who try to drive their [illegible] through a chandelier, but you know what I mean. When things don't suit me I roar, just roar, I do. That's the kind of a kicker I am."

"That kind of high kicking never gets a salary of $100 a week that I have heard of, Colonel."

"You have it right there, Fleeting. We kickers are not appreciated. I tell you there ought to be licensed kickers in every community to keep things regulated. Now, everyone should not be permitted to kick, or kickers would become a nuisance. But let a few of us experienced old kickers be appointed, and we will roar for the whole community. On application we would kick with neatness and dispatch, in a systematic way that would accomplish something."

"We kickers are a sort of public benefactor. We kick and get things run right and the easy going follows get the benefit. Chances are they kick on us as nuisances. That's the way things go in this world, but I would just like to rearrange a few things in this world by and by. I'd just like to arrange the whole world."

"Colonel, you are getting excited. You were not elected Alderman as you expected."

"No, you can easily know that. If I had been you would have been some tall kicking in that Council to this time."

"About what?"

"Oh, I don't know, just kicking. There goes that street car five feet beyond the sidewalk, and I've got to step in the mud. Won't I register a kick with the company for that. Chances are I'll bring a suit."

They have an act in one of the variety shows at Cripple Creek which is sensational at least, if it has nothing else to recommend it. A negro comes on the stage and after repeating a verse or [illegible] in the gallery mocks him. He pretends to be angry but sings again, only to be hooted. A quarrel ensues and the singer suddenly rushes up to a bar, gets a revolver and makes for the gallery. A scuffle ensues, two shots are fired and a few minutes later a manikin is thrown from the gallery into the body of the house. As a majority of people in a place of that kind are always anticipating a shooting scrape, the excitement of those who are [illegible] can be imagined, especially if the straw body comes tumbling upon him. It is related of one valiant Colorado Springs man that when he saw the trate singer pick up the gun, that he rushed upon him and captured the weapon. His bravery, however, has only brought the jeers of his friends.

A friend in a magazine called "The Blue and the Gray" recently, an article by John A. Cockrell in which the statement is made that at the battle of Shiloh all the Confederate dead turned black and the Federals remained pale. I had never heard of that before but the writer spoke of it as if it was a well-known fact. I asked a veteran of this city who was wounded while fighting in the Hornet's Nest at Shiloh if he knew it to be true, and he declared that he never heard of it. He said the dead of both sides who lay about him were pale, but that in other fights he had seen bodies turn black. His explanation for this was that before going into the fight they were given liquor with gunpowder in it to excite them into a frenzy. Can some of the other veterans give some information on this subject?

Parliamentary Humor.

Sir John Lubbock, M. P., gave an evening's pleasant entertainment to the members of the Workingmen's college in Great Ormond street by discussing for them in an appropriate and chatty manner "Hours of Idleness." Personal and [illegible] Sir John thinks that the best thing to say on his experience is—[illegible] and was bound to advise that the college at West [illegible] was for exactly a parallel of [illegible] the Strand. There is a [illegible] and [illegible] in the [illegible] and [illegible] systematically by [illegible] any which seem to [illegible] men. In fact Sir John thinks that [illegible] by that [illegible] as humorists, and [illegible] is inclined to [illegible] the [illegible] despised Scotchman, who, if they [illegible] a joke, at least pays [illegible] given.

For instance, it was a Scotchman who [illegible] gravely informed the house that the [illegible] of [illegible] for the Afghan war was a "mere flea bite in the sea," and [illegible] remarked, "You may depend upon it, sir, the pale face of the British soldier is the back ground of the Indian glory." The next piece of humorous ridicule in the [illegible] was that of a young member [illegible] to speak and, in a maiden speech [illegible] quarter of an hour expressing his [illegible] of sentiments with profuse [illegible] which in the course of speech [illegible] words and [illegible] he finally [illegible] that it was not the case after all. Sir John thinks that the [illegible] was speaking simply to himself, but in [illegible] of [illegible] he was talking to the [illegible].—London Tele[illegible].

New York's Odd Streets.

Actually only two roads were established when the town of New Amsterdam was founded and there was hardly room for [illegible] only the principal [illegible] streets. One of them, on the line of the present Broadway, followed the [illegible] from the fort to the Brooklyn ferry at about the present Peck slip. The second, on the line of the present Broadway, led [illegible] from the fort, past farms and gardens, into the wilderness.

Broad street and [illegible] Path [illegible] were not streets at all. On the line of the latter with a [illegible] on each side and a [illegible] in the middle, [illegible] Broad street, where [illegible] Path, which could [illegible] only a horse and bike could, there was [illegible] to be [illegible] [illegible] was also [illegible] Broad street then called the Heere Gracht, a favorite dwelling place with the aristocracy of that early day. New York Stock Market.

New York, May 13—Money on call has been nominally quiet.

The stock market was extremely weak during the greater part of the session. Rumors of gold shipments for the coming week, dispatches that the outlook for the bank failures got worst all combined to depress prices, the latter making violent attacks upon the leading shares. To resist their operations they gave wide currency to rumors affecting the credit of prominent houses and attack culminating with a story that H. B. Hollins & Co. failed. As a matter of fact the firm in question at the time the story was put out sent an emphatic denial to the president of the Stock exchange stating that they were fully prepared to meet every obligation. The result was a rally in the earnings of 1 to 1½ per cent, the latter in Rock Island, which sold up from 66 to 67½. The previous decline was equal to [illegible]

Mr. Geo. W. Frost of Lake George is in the city.

A party of six Denver boys is at the Alamo hotel.

Dr. Hall [illegible] the city yesterday.

S. T. Chapman of Calhan made final proof on his land claim in the County court yesterday.

Colonel H. S. Irey and family left yesterday for a visit to Kentucky and to see the World's Fair.

Mrs. Ernest Whitney leaves on Monday for the east to be absent some time. She will return in September.

Mrs. W. A. Platt is spending a few weeks in the country, and will return to the city about the 1st of June.

Dr. Hyde of Denver University gives the third lecture in his course at the First M. E. Church to-morrow evening.

Mr. M. M. Maybury, brother of Mr. J. F. Maybury, arrived in the city yesterday from Courtland, N. Y., to make this his permanent home.

Mr. and Mrs. Abram Van Vechten left for the East during the week to attend the wedding of Ms. Van Vechten's [illegible] in Albany next Tuesday.

The Chambers of Commerce is just now receiving a number of inquiries every day, concerning climate, houses, board, etc. in Colorado Springs.

Mr. Fred C. Stete, late of Kansas City, and a brother of Herbert Stete, arrived yesterday and will be connected with the Colway Shoe company of this city.

Miss Wadleigh, one of the teachers in the public schools, has received an appointment at the World's fair as interpreter, and will leave shortly to assume the duties.

Dr. Montague's lecture Friday evening, on "Glimpses of Mexico," was quite largely attended, but the stereopticon did not work satisfactorily and the lecture is to be repeated in the near future.

John Duffin announced his intention in the County court yesterday of renouncing his allegiance to King Oscar II of Sweden, to become a citizen under Grover II of the United States and Hawaii.

Mr. Charles Cadmus has returned to the city from New Mexico, where he has been for the past year. He brings some [illegible] of gold and silver ore from Lincoln county, N. M., taken from claims owned by C. Carr [illegible] gentlemen.

The new Episcopal church will worship Sunday in the old Congregational building on Bijou street, which has been leased for a year. Rev. Mr. Bradshaw of Denver will preach at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. The bishop has fixed the boundary line of the two parishes at Boulder street.

Young men are reminded of the men's meeting this afternoon at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A. Some it is not definitely settled it is hoped and expected that [illegible] who has met such remarkable success in reaching the laboring classes in the city of London, will be the speaker. All men are invited.

Miss [illegible] teacher of German in the High school, has resigned and Mrs. Charlotte S. Denfield has been appointed to the position. Miss Gerrans has been elected the teacher of English to take the place of Miss McNeill of Denver who resigns in order to pursue a special course at the University of Denver.

The following from Aspen concerning Mr. Geo. E. Ford, formerly of this city, will be of interest here: "Ex-Commissioner Ford was yesterday found not guilty of the charge of forgery. The note Ford is said to have forged was dated one day after the time the cash was paid him by Van Norman. On this account the Court instructed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. Mr. Ford says he intends remaining in Aspen until he redeems all his indebtedness."

The third concert of the Colorado Springs Music Club took place yesterday afternoon in the College chapel. Mr. Pearson gave several pleasing piano solos, among them a "Funeral March," by Chopin, and a "Nachtstuck" by Schumann. Mrs. Campau sang very sweetly, and her encore was well deserved. Miss Glosser's two songs were also [illegible]. The attendance at the musical was good, and the whole programme was quite as enjoyable as in either of the previous concerts.

Primrose & West's Minstrels.

Primrose & West's minstrels gave two performances at the Opera House yesterday. The afternoon audience was not large but in the evening there was the usual Colorado Springs minstrel house. The minstrels are good [illegible] and go with considerable dash and vim. The first part is handsomely set and the numbers were excellent. The singing was unusually good and the jokes were nearly all new and bright.

In the second part there were a number of very fine acts. Abgell & Masaud gave a fine act of balancing on blocks. Morris Cronin gave an exhibition of Indian club juggling the equal of which has never been seen in this city. "Musical" Dale does a good musical specialty and the show concludes with a very amusing novelty called the "Monkeys and the Farmer." Altogether it is a very clean, neat minstrel performance.

The Art of Working In Gold.

The Romans copied the Greek and Etruscan goldsmiths' work, though they also often used the ornaments themselves taken from the ancient tombs. Mingled the art of this kind of working gold was lost until early in the present century, [illegible] of the Etruscan methods still being employed by workmen in a village in a remote corner of the Abruzzi.—London Times.

Church rectory, by the Rev. A. B. Kieffer, Mr. W. F. Freeman of Phenix, Mariposa county, Arizona, and Miss Willie Cullom of Arapahoe county, Colorado.

A SPECIAL ATTRACTION AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

A SUCCESSFUL TRIO.

Three Lady Doctors Who Are Making Money.

Mrs. Polly Has a Wonderful Gift of Oratory and Is in Great Demand as a Speaker Upon Social or Political Subjects.

Dr. Luella Cool Received Her First Lessons in Medicine at Her Husband's Knee.

Dr. Neal Is a Graduate of the Chicago Medical College.

Three lady doctors who are making money and a name for themselves in Denver are Mrs. Polly, Dr. Luella Cool and Dr. Neal. Mrs. Polly has a wonderful gift of oratory and is in great demand as a speaker upon social or political subjects. Tall, graceful and slender, with exquisite red-gold hair, fair complexion and wonderful brown eyes, she is an eminently attractive woman.

She is a good and devoted mother, and amid all the interruptions of an active life she has carefully supervised the training and education of her children. She has introduced successfully several bills to the legislature, the latest having been passed and become law within the last few weeks. It is known as the pioneer's juvenile bill—is of a reformatory nature. She is a lover of dainty, artistic dress and refined surroundings and is essentially feminine in her attire.

Another well known professional woman is Dr. Luella Cool, a fashionable dentist. From her husband, who was in practice at Sacramento, to modify the state constitution so as to permit women to follow any legitimate calling or profession, and finally was received at the bar. Mrs. Polly has a wonderful gift of oratory and is in great demand as a speaker upon social or political subjects. Tall, graceful and slender, with exquisite red-gold hair, fair complexion and wonderful brown eyes, she is an eminently attractive woman.

She is a good and devoted mother, and amid all the interruptions of an active life she has carefully supervised the training and education of her children. She has introduced successfully several bills to the legislature, the latest having been passed and become law within the last few weeks. It is known as the pioneer's juvenile bill—is of a reformatory nature. She is a lover of dainty, artistic dress and refined surroundings and is essentially feminine in her attire.

Another well known professional woman is Dr. Luella Cool, a fashionable dentist. From her husband, who was in practice at Sacramento, Cool received his first lessons in medicine, and every day for 12 years she practiced beside him. Finding herself alone in the world and with a child to take care of, she engaged an office and began the regular practice of dentistry.

At first she had a good deal of public prejudice to fight against, but her work was sufficient answer to all included to scoff.

Her offices are in The Chronicle building, the most fashionable and elegant quarter of the city, and she possesses among her patients some of the wealthiest people in San Francisco. She is well and creditably known in society, and is a favorite with diamonds.

Mrs. Cool is a brunette of pretty good woman, a brunette with brilliant dark eyes and an animated expression.

Dr. Neal graduated at the Chicago Medical College in 1887, and has since practiced in Denver. She has a large practice among women and children, and is a member of the Denver Medical Society.

Colors That Figured Oscar Wilde.

"What a pity Oscar wasn't here to see the reception given to him!" exclaimed one of his many admirers. "He would have been delighted with the way we have decorated the house in honor of his visit. Why, we have used nothing but his favorite colors—sunflowers and peacock feathers."

Women in Intellectual Pursuits.

One of the most accomplished of American women, the late Mrs. Anstice Mott of New York, once wrote to an American friend from an English university town where she was spending the winter, that she was learning with some difficulty to adapt herself to the utter intellectual subordination which is expected of every woman in England. The only reproach that was said by the greatest genius of all literary women—the German Rahel—whom Jean Paul pronounced the only humorous woman, was that she devoted him without mercy for the untidiness of the woods in his books—fifty years ago. She could not imagine why any one should raise the question of whether a good book had been said or done, as if a good book would not be good if it never had been written. Of late years, in England, there has been a wide recognition of women in literary relationships; the Society of Authors admits women to membership on the same terms as men, and the Société des Gens de Lettres, Paris, does the same. So, also, in Germany, such a suggestion would hardly be tolerated. In America it is a remarkable fact that while a few of the older literary or scientific societies are of men only, all those which can be called modern are admitted women from the beginning. The Modern Language, Historical, and Folk-lore societies in all of which women are members and often take an important part, have their meetings of several such societies in London and Paris and have never even a personal present, though the folk-lore society does constitute an exception. Which, perhaps, exhibits contempt and fear to be salvation.—Harper's Bazar.

Little Things in the House.

Know well-cared floor and clean hearth. Let the windows be kept bright and shining, the furniture, books and pictures free from dust and closets in perfect order. Let there be hooks for twine, cord and buttons, a place for the shoes and slippers. Hooks to hold the cloaks and coats should be provided, giving the ample bath robe a convenient corner. Towels are to be always at hand, and recollect that constant vigilance has its own reward.

For is it not here when day closes, with its duties, cares and fears, that we slip away to our sanctuary, within which the lamps are lighted and "he goes on, with the curtains drawn to shut out the careless world." The fire ablaze is still alive even and muse over the past, hope, plan and build for the future. It is a castle all our own, and as our feet tread the soft rug we catch the ring of [illegible] sometimes shuts up sorrow's eye." Soothed by sweet and benign fancies, we drop into slumber and dream the hours away.—Good Housekeeping.

Women's Clubs: Their Advantages and Temptations.

Whatever else may be said of the club movement, it has undoubtedly been a great educator of women. Its influence is felt in the home, in society, in the church, in the world of letters, in the world of art, as well. Even several successful art clubs, with thousands of students. Just now it is finishing, on the site of the old exposition building, in the heart of the city, a permanent Art palace to cost about $100,000, and to be the summer theater of the Woman's Auxiliary.... The president of this art institute is Charles L. Hutchinson, a banker and money maker, who still sells stock and knows it. The chairman of the executive committee is Mrs. J. H. Dole, who is one of the most active women in Chicago. She has done more than any other man to raise the standard of art and public appreciation to the present level of America. The best proof of his rare judgment is found in the fact that many of the paintings which he formerly brought into prominence by displaying them in the Chicago expositions are now shown among the famous pictures of the world and are given prominent places in the Columbian art palace. Mr. Dole and other pioneers in the field of art education have found that if a quantity of poor people have the artistic aspiration in high degree, and that the almost universal love of art in America is sure to beat fruit, sooner or later, not only in general culture, but in the production of masters and masterpieces. Even now foreign visitors are discovering that art is ascendant in the centers of population, and that it is growing in the country as well as in the cities. Mr. Dole, who has done so much for art in Chicago, tells me he often overhears farmers and mechanics commenting on pictures while walking through the galleries, and that they are familiar with the characteristics of the various schools, thus they know the famous pictures of the year and are quite familiar with all current art matters.

Foreigners who come to Chicago expecting to find here a new, raw town that still dozes on the prairies and the backwoods are surprised to find it a center of art culture. They are amazed, in the first place, at the artistic aspiration which led these Chicagoans to the adoption of the plan [illegible] and the [illegible] magnificent architectural display the world has ever seen. They are surprised and delighted with the number and the quality of their [illegible] statuary, carved pediments and many other forms of high work in which the [illegible] buildings and grounds of the exposition are to be clothed. It is to be a city of art, and the most [illegible] of all efforts of decoration and ornamentation is to be made [illegible] and [illegible] before the [illegible] exposition. And when finally our friends from across the [illegible] Art palace which is to [illegible] a permanent [illegible] of contents our [illegible] Art [illegible] and conspicuous [illegible] the works of American artists who are surely developing a school of their own, the conclusion is irresistible that art itself is the consequence and promise in the western world.

Artists the west will gain an immense impetus from the fair. Many of the noble paintings on [illegible] statuary now in this palace are to remain in Chicago indefinitely. A noble work exhibit in the foreign section is a collection of art from ancient Greek sculptures [illegible] and were here as a special compliment to America. After the doors of the exposition are closed this magnificent collection is to be presented [illegible] the Chicago Art institute.

No doubt it has been made clear as to the permanency of the Exposition Art palace. It would seem a pity to tear it down, for it

International Lesson for May 21, 1893—Against Intemperance—Prov. 23:29-35.

[Arranged from Peloubet's Notes.]

GOLDEN TEXT—Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise—Prov. 20:1.

INTRODUCTION—Prof. Phelps says: "The Old Testament often seems as if it were inspired specially for young men. It is verified in the present chapter. A father, forewarned of social dangers, gives a wise son, full of pleasant manners and a worldliest parent, advises him in regard to great dangers, even with a little gush of affectionate counsels him to keep out of the company of wine bibbers and gluttons, who will surely come to poverty. Finally, with a strong, rapid hand, he draws a character sketch of the drunkard, which hangs in the world's great picture gallery, a solemn warning for all time. This picture is the text of the lesson."—Peloubet.

THE SOCIAL QUICKSANDS.

It sometimes happens on certain coasts of Brittany or Scotland that a man, traveling on foot, walking on the beach at low tide, far from the bank, suddenly notices that for several minutes he has been walking with some difficulty. The strand beneath his feet is like pitch; his soles stick to it; it is sand no longer—it is glue. The beach is perfectly dry, but at every step he takes, as soon as he lifts his foot, the print which it leaves fills with water. The eye, however, has noticed no change. The immense strand is smooth and tranquil; all the sand has the same appearance; nothing distinguishes [illegible] and it is that which is the danger; so the joyous little clerks of sand-fleas continue to leap tumultuously over the wayfarer's feet. The man pursues his way, goes forward, confides to the local endeavors to get nearer the upland. He is now [illegible] advance about. Quite he feels somewhat as if the weight of his feet increases with every step he takes. Suddenly he sinks in. He sinks in two or three inches. Decidedly he is not on the right road; he stops to take his bearings. All at once he looks at his feet. His feet have disappeared. The sand covers them. He draws his feet out of the sand; he will retrace his steps; he turns back; he sinks in deeper. The sand comes up to his ankles; he pulls himself out, and throws himself to the left; the sand is half-leg deep. He throws himself to the right; the sand comes up to his shins. Then he recognizes with unspeakable terror that he is caught in the quicksand, and that he has been [illegible] him the fearful medium in which man can no more walk than a fish can swim. He throws off his load, if he has one, lightens himself like a ship in distress. It is already too late; the sand is above his knees. He calls, he waves his hat or his handkerchief; the sand gains on him more and more. The beach is deserted. The land is too far off, the town is too high in sight, help altogether. He is condemned to that appalling burial long, inflexible, implacable, impossible to hasten or to hasten, which [illegible] which will not end, which [illegible] free, in full health, [illegible] you by the feet, which no effort that you attempt, at every effort that you make, [illegible] a little deeper, [illegible] you daily into the [illegible] upon the [illegible] the smoke of the [illegible] on the plains, the [illegible] of the ships upon the sea, the birds [illegible] singing the sunshine and the [illegible] the victim attempts to sit down, to lie down, to creep. Every movement lowers him. He straightens up, he climbs in. He feels [illegible] is being swallowed up. He [illegible] implores [illegible] to the [illegible] despairs. Behold him waist-deep in the sand. The sand reaches his breast. He [illegible] only a bust. He raises his great arms [illegible] groans, [illegible] the beach with his fists, [illegible] by [illegible] straw, leans upon [illegible] to pull himself out of the [illegible] The sand reaches his shoulders, the sand reaches his neck, the sand reaches his mouth, the sand [illegible] his nostrils, [illegible] The sand rises above the sand; a hand only [illegible] to the surface of the beach. [illegible] is the only [illegible] trace. The earth filled with [illegible] becomes a trap. It is the same plain, and opens [illegible] way.—Victor Hugo.

You have doubtless noticed during this description the striking analogy between the quicksand and intemperance. The young man indulges in his social glass merrily, until at length [illegible] a little of the power of appetite, but [illegible] not anxious. His appetite is [illegible] in check, and he goes [illegible] without a thought of danger. Some are [illegible] him, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

"Have you ever been to Ghisleri?" asked Miss Middleton, as the carriage rolled away from the door.

"Never. I have heard of it, of course, but I have never been there. Is it worth seeing?"

"Yes, I think so. It is very curious. Some of the rooms are very fine, and there is a splendid view from the windows. Besides, it is a very good restaurant. Shall we go there?"

"I should like it very much," answered Mr. Ardsley.

"Then we will go there to-morrow. Shall we say one o'clock?"

"Very well. I will call for you at one."

"Thank you. Good-bye."

Mr. Ardsley walked away, and Miss Middleton turned to her companion.

"Now, Laura," she said, "I am going to tell you all about it. I know you will be glad to hear it, and I am sure you will keep my secret."

"Of course I will, dear," answered Miss Arden, looking up from the book she was reading. "I am very much interested in your affairs, and I am glad you have told me. I suppose Mr. Ardsley is the gentleman you were talking about last night?"

"Yes, he is the gentleman I was talking about last night," replied Miss Middleton, with a little laugh. "But I am not going to tell you anything about him. I am going to tell you about myself. I am going to tell you why I was so unkind to poor Mr. Ardsley when he was in Paris, and why I refused to see him when he called upon me. "WHAT CAN AILS HER."

"Wrotslo," is a castle in a bog, somewhere in Ireland. The Weird—either a fate that pursues the inhabitants of the castle, or a ghost which is supposed to haunt certain rooms in it—no one hardly knows which after reading the story. This castle has been left to a certain young Terrence Fitz Gerald, and one of the conditions attached to the property is that the heir shall live there four months every year. Terrence marries a bright young Parisian girl named Noemie Richepin, and takes her to the old castle to spend the four months aforesaid. The presence of a good cook, thoughtfully sent along by the father of the girl, is not sufficient to keep the young people from quarreling. Terrence goes away, and stays away a long time, without sending any word of his whereabouts. While he is away, a former lover of Noemie's visits the castle, leaving messages from her father, and while there falls desperately sick and remains for several weeks.

How M. Laurent finally gets away, and how Terrence gets back, and what happened in the mean time, constitutes the story. It is not a long story nor a very strong one, but it is fairly well done, and may help to kill an idle half hour.

To the publishers, Messrs. Tait, Sons & Co., we may be allowed to suggest a little more care in the proof-reading of their covers. Weird is spelled wrong in two places on the cover of this novel.

"ELIZABETH: CHRISTIAN SCIENTIST."

"Matt Crim," if it be not a nom de plume, has written one book, "Adventures of a Fair Rebel," and a number of short stories, "In Boston Town and Elsewhere," which display a considerable amount of literary ability and which gave some colorful promise to regarde her future career. But the perusal of "Elizabeth: Christian Scientist," just issued by Charles H. Webster, is apt to remove all preconceptions in Miss Crim's favor, if not to make one regret whatever kind things may have been said of her. A certain amateurishness which may be well excused in a first volume becomes a serious fault in a third, and any additional manuscript, unless it is a serious menace to future success.

But it is rather in the central idea of the book that the greatest fault is to be found. As a story the book is unworthy of consideration, for when the Christian Science part of it is left out nothing of consequence is left. The book then is an argument of action for Christian Science. Now it is plainly evident that while such a book need not necessarily be true, it ought to be true to nature. There is one chapter which consists of an address of Elisabeth delivered at a private gathering in New York city. But outside of that, the authoress of the book rests upon three events of a semi-miraculous character. A young man is mysteriously cured of a sprained ankle; a little boy is cured of hip disease, and a man is rescued from the appetite for strong drink. If these events could be proved, the claim of the Christian Scientists might readily be admitted, but the argument of those who are opposed to this doctrine rests upon the lack of proof of any similar occurrences, and this lack is not supplied by anything in the book. While therefore the book will be acceptable to those who already agree with its principles, it can have very little effect on those who do not, and as a novel of purpose it is therefore a failure.

As for the literary quality of the book, The story is told in a straightforward way, and the determination of Elisabeth that her theories could not interfere with her womanly duties, is a most sensible one. It is to be hoped that Miss Crim will write another book and leave out the theoretical part.

"THOSE GIRLS."

The last issue of the Lovell Series published by Tait, Sons & Co. of New York is "Those Girls," by John Strange Winter. The title is rather frivolous, but the book itself, like most of the others written by this author, is worth reading. "Those Girls" are the four daughters of a Mrs. McKenzie. The heroine of this story is the third daughter, Betty. The volume opens with a scene in the boarding school of Madame Le Brun at Brussels, an institution from which the elder sisters, Rosa and Gwendoline, have already been graduated and to which Betty and her youngest sister, Nugent, are pursuing their studies.

Betty is found out in a correspondence with a young man. Upon her refusing to divulge his name, she is first shut up in Madame's private room, and then sent for two years to a convent. When she comes out of the convent finally it is only to find her former lover, now transformed into a lord by the death of his father, his uncle or somebody, apparently the accepted lover of her oldest sister. The complications that arise thereupon form the subject of the last half of the story. Into those complications it would hardly be fair for us to enter here, even if we had the space.

The book is well written, and the differences in character between Mrs. McKenzie and her four daughters are skillfully indicated. It is not a great novel by any means, but it is a thoroughly clean one and decidedly interesting.

AM I JEW OR GENTILE?

If Mr. Thomas A. Davies, the author of the work above named, had lived a few hundred years ago, he would probably have been burned at the stake for heresy. To-day his roasting will be confined to the newspapers. Mr. Davies bases his particular claim to distinction on the fact, not previously unknown to Hebrew scholars, that in certain places in the book of Genesis, the definite article "the" is used in connection with the name "Adam," while in others it is omitted. From this simple fact Mr. Davies has derived the remarkable conclusion that there were created not less than six Adams, one of whom was The Adam, (Mr. Davies says THE ADAM,) who became the ancestor of the Hebrew race. According to Mr. Davies's theory each of the races of mankind had a distinct and separate progenitor, with race characteristics, so that there was a negro Adam, a Chinese Adam, a Caucasian Adam, a Malay Adam and a Jewish Adam, all in addition to the Hebrew who was The Adam, par excellence. The creation of Eve in the traditional manner was therefore a necessity in order to keep the race pure. Mr. Davies regrets that the Clergy are powerless to assist him in his work of correcting the Bible, since they have all been educated in the Church seminaries, and of course are bound to teach within the lines of that institution, which has been founded on erroneous translations. It is evident that Mr. Davies has not thought of General Weaver's plan of founding a new university to correct the system of education.

Having provided a manifold Adam, Mr. Davies next proceeds to minimize the Deluge, declaring that it was not universal and only affected that portion of the human race who were descended from The Adam. Next in the book there are fifteen postulates which embody Mr. Davies's opinion of the Creation and things in general, and then over about page 10 the book blossoms into poetry which unfolds itself with a real invocation like an epic, and proceeds in a dozen or so disconnected pieces on such subjects as "Nothingness," "Creation's Dawn," "Seal of Heaven," "New Born Light," "Installation of Time," etc. Some of these poems have a most familiar air. For instance here is one that sounds very much like a communication that was handed in to The Gazette last summer by a Raymond excursionist who was testing light air as a preventive of threatened paralysis.
